The Latest in the Library
Check out how the Library is reaching users in fun and creative ways

Finals Cram Session:
We recently held a cram session in the Library to help students prepare for finals. Pizza, snacks, and drinks were offered up to fuel our students, while Writing Center tutors and librarians were available for drop-in help. We even had giveaway bags, and one lucky student won our raffle prize! With over 30 attendees, we hope to do this again in the near future. Check out photos from the event below!

Other Library Events:
In April, we organized a series of workshops for Money Smart Week. Attendees joined us online and in the Library for sessions on first-time home buying, salary negotiations, and financial opportunities at NU. We also held a movie ticket giveaway in April for National Poetry Month. Three winners received tickets to see A Quiet Passion, a biographical film about Emily Dickinson.

New at the Library:
Have you seen our library tutorials? We have an amazing Multimedia team that works with our librarians to create a growing collection of tutorials focused on making your life easier. Many of these are quick research tips that address common questions. Our latest tutorial, Using Citations to Find Books and Articles, can be found on our Tutorials and Training Tools page: http://nu.libguides.com/training.

Around the University

The Library likes to reach students early in their academic career, so we’re very fortunate to be able to participate in the quarterly Welcome Aboard Orientation for new students that is organized by Student Services. At the latest orientation, librarians attended to promote the Library’s resources and services to both in-person and online. This is a great opportunity for us to raise awareness!

In addition to working with Student Services, the Library is often partnering with National University’s schools to put on events and workshops. The School of Health and Human Services recently put on a Public Health Fair, and we were more than happy to help organize, advertise, and participate in the event! We even had a mobile book display with public health books available for checkout.

We love working with staff and faculty, but a lot of what we do involves hands-on work directly with students. Every year, the National University Student Scholarship Conference takes place in April, and the Library had a chance to attend this year! We got to explore some of the amazing projects that students have been working on, many who are regular users of the Library. Being able to see the end product of our efforts is such a rewarding experience.
